

Teach For China: Eight Years of Impact

Teach For China was founded in 2008 to ensure that one day, all children in China can enjoy access to a quality education.

China's Education Challenge

In China today, where you are born determines your educational prospects and therefore life opportunities. Affluent urban centers spend up to five times as much educating students on a per capita basis compared to low-income communities while early education and foreign language resources are almost unheard of outside of major cities. The impact of this inequality is dramatic: nearly 80% of students from Tier 1 Chinese cities will have the chance to attend college, with only 5% of poor rural students receiving the same opportunity. In urban areas, the more than 20 million children who live in cities with their migrant worker parents also lack access to high-quality educational resources.

If education is the key to escaping poverty, then millions of children in China face daunting if not impossible odds.

The future of China's children—and of the country—rest on closing this gap. We need the best and brightest from China's next generation working to solve this problem.

Teach For China's Approach

Teach For China is enlisting the most promising young graduates from the top universities in China and abroad to ensure that one day, every child enjoys access to a quality education. We recruit outstanding college graduates from top universities in China and abroad and train them to serve as full-time teachers ("Fellows") in low-income Chinese schools. Fellows spend two years working relentlessly in their classrooms to equip students with academic and life skills. They leave the Fellowship not only with invaluable professional and leadership experience but also with a deep understanding of and commitment to solving China's educational challenges. As alumni, they will form a force for change working to create an education system that equips all of China's children for success.
